ONE-BOAT NETWORK™

Humminbird® and Minn Kota® share more than just a physical address. We share a passion for fishing and a mission to craft gear that lets you enjoy your time on the water even more. That's why we created the One-Boat Network™: a commitment to make the most advanced fishing gear even better, by making it work together. Our engineering teams constantly look for ways our products can seamlessly integrate and communicate, unlocking more features, capabilities and potential for anglers everywhere. Visit humminbird.com/learn/one-boat-network to learn more.

WHAT CAN YOU DO ON THE ONE-BOAT NETWORK?

Nothing beats the clarity and detail of MEGA Imaging® on your Humminbird fish finder. So we made it easier to get that image to the screen. New Minn Kota trolling motors with built-in MEGA Imaging® have a MEGA Imaging® transducer housed right in the lower unit of the motor. No messy wires, more crystal clear images and a better view of the water below that lets you find what you're after.

Hit Spot-Lock on your Minn Kota trolling motor to stay on any fishing spot. If it's productive, store that Spot-Lock using i-Pilot® Link™. Later, select the Spot-Lock location from your Humminbird fish finder and tell your motor to take you there. Your motor can drive the boat for you, landing you back at your spot so you can fish the honey hole all day long.

When you find your spot, there's not always time to get to the back of the boat. So we worked together to make Minn Kota Raptor and Talon shallow water anchors controllable from anywhere on the boat. Use the interface on your Humminbird fish finder, or the i-Pilot Link remote control, to lower or raise Raptor and Talon, change anchoring modes and more—no matter where you are.

REALITY TV.

MUST-WATCH DETAIL, NON-STOP ACTION

MEGA LIVE IMAGING™

It's showtime. New MEGA Live Imaging™ delivers the edge-to-edge clarity you need to see exactly what's below the surface in real time, with no gaps in coverage and MEGA Imaging® detail across the entire view. Want to know if a certain area is worth fishing? You can be absolutely certain with crystal-clear, live sonar returns of fish, structure and your lure, in Down, Forward or Landscape Mode. There's no image like it. For real. Learn more at Humminbird.com/MEGALive.

MESSAGE FROM DOUG CRAMER

I couldn't be more excited to celebrate year seven of the Last Mountain Fall Walleye Classic. We create a lot of memories every year, and I can't wait to create more in the future. I am pleased to have the opportunity to work with Rob and Donna Schultz, the Sask Walleye Trail, and the Strasbourg Rec Centre Fundraising Committee. This event welcomes the community as a whole, as well as family and friends. I believe in creating an atmosphere where everyone feels a part of the excitement, making it more than just a fishing event – it's a shared experience that brings us all together making this one of the biggest walleye tournaments in Canada.

Once again we will all meet at G & S Marina at Rowan's Ravine at the largest walleye tournament in Canada !

Tight Lines Everyone! Cheers To 2024!

Thank you

On behalf of the Strasbour and District Rec Centre we would like to say thank you to the fishermen and fisher women for supporting the rink over the last 5 years. LMFWC is our biggest fundraiser every year and we appreciate the support from the Walleye Trail community. This year was our biggest fundraiser and we could not have accomplished this without your support. The money raised goes to much needed repairs for our aging rink.

Everyone on the Walleye Trail holds a special place in our hearts and we can't Thank You enough.

We are looking forward to seeing you all again at the 2024 LMFWC.

BATTLING BAROTRAUMA DURING CATCH AND RELEASE: AVOID DEEP WATER

Barotrauma is tissue damage caused by a sudden change in pressure. Fish experience the typical atmospheric pressure we are all under, plus the additional pressure of the water on their bodies. The deeper a fish is below the surface, the more water pressure it experiences. When a fish is caught by an angler it is brought to the surface relatively quickly, and experiences a sudden and potentially dramatic reduction in pressure. The consequence is that any gasses in the fish's body expand to reflect the new pressure. This includes changes in the gas volume in the swim bladder, and it may also cause dissolved gasses to come out of solution and expand in a variety of other tissues. Some common symptoms of barotrauma in fish include:

- Bloated belly
- Floating upside down and not able to submerge
- Flared gills
- Bulging eyes
- Stomach protruding into the throat or farther
- Anal swelling / prolapse
- Hemorrhaging or bleeding from a variety of areas
- death

Not all fish are equally susceptible to the full range of barotrauma symptoms. Members of the Salmon and Trout family have a duct connecting the swim bladder and the digestive system, and can rapidly "burp" out gasses as they are being retrieved. The scientific term for this type of fish is physostomous; northern pike also belong to this category. These fish experience fewer issues with the swim bladder and excess buoyancy, but may still suffer other types of tissue damage. Members of the Perch family such as walleye, sauger, and yellow perch do not have the duct connecting the swim bladder and the digestive tract and cannot rapidly release gas during retrieval. These species are categorized as physoclistous; burbot are also in this category. Here are some important barotrauma facts, mostly based on scientific studies of physoclistous species like walleye:

- Mild barotrauma symptoms may begin as shallow as 4.5m (15 ft); symptoms get worse with increasing depth.

- At 9.1m (30 ft) depth the pressure is double that at the surface; physoclistous fish (e.g., walleye) caught at this depth or deeper may experience severe barotrauma.
- Fishing in shallow water next to a deep drop off may produce some fish with unexpected barotrauma.
- Barotrauma symptoms are exacerbated when fish are held at the surface; holding fish in a live well generally makes barotrauma worse.
- Slow retrieval does not alleviate barotrauma; the diffusion of gas from the swim bladder and other tissues takes hours or longer.
- The only way to systematically reduce barotrauma in walleye is to avoid fishing in deep water.

The Saskatchewan Sportfish Research Group has been conducting research on barotrauma in tournament-caught walleye for a number of years. A continuing partnership with the Last Mountain Fall Walleye Classic has made a large portion of this work possible, and we are always grateful to the organizers and the anglers for working with us. We have been studying barotrauma in a number of different ways: (a) assessment of symptoms in fish in-hand; (b) tracking of fish after release using acoustic telemetry; and (c) long-term tagging programs that examine recapture frequency of tagged fish. One of the key questions for both anglers and fisheries managers is whether or not treatment of barotrauma in walleye is effective. There are two major types of treatment: (1) venting or “fizzing” of the swim bladder with a hypodermic needle to let out excess gas volume; and (2) descending the fish back to capture depth with a temporarily attached weighted device. Both of these techniques have potential pros and cons, but the bottom line is that there simply isn’t enough good data out there to make well-informed decisions yet. However, we have been hard at work doing research and there are some key take-away points for walleye compiled from years of data collection.

- Barotrauma is by far the most common cause of impairment of fish at traditional weigh-in walleye tournaments in Saskatchewan.
- Stress, including high water temperature and fatigue, exacerbates barotrauma symptoms.
- Fish with severe barotrauma that are released and float at the surface have very high mortality rates.
- Fin weights do not alleviate moderate to severe barotrauma symptoms.
- Fizzing changes the depths and areas of the lake used by walleye in the days after release.
- Fish that are descended back to capture depth behave more normally in the days after release.

- Tagged fish with barotrauma that are fizzed are substantially less likely to be recaptured.

Ultimately, our research has revealed that barotrauma is a substantial issue for both fish in traditional tournaments, as well as in other forms of recreational angling. There is still much work to be done. At this point we can say with confidence that treatments like fizzing do save some that for walleye or other physoclistous species. But some additional thought may be required to adapt to specific situations. For example, if you’re fishing Fox’s Point on Last Mountain Lake, the depth may shift from 30 feet to 60 feet in just a few boat lengths. Fish rushing up from deeper water to smash your bait may have severe barotrauma even though they were technically caught at 30 fish; however, long-term tagging results suggest that a high proportion of treated fish don’t make it. Consequently, barotrauma treatment of fish should be viewed as a last resort for unexpected cases, and not as a mainstream strategy for catch and release angling. Our goal as anglers and fish enthusiasts should be to eliminate as much barotrauma as possible, and the focus must therefore be on avoiding deep water. How deep? In general, 30 feet is used as the cut-off point – anglers should definitely not be fishing deeper than feet. Normally the depth change to catch prey would not be an issue for them, they would simply swim back down and return to pressure equilibrium. If they are caught, they don’t have the ability to self-correct the pressure difference, which leads to barotrauma symptoms. Let’s do our best to make sure the fish we catch and release are happy and healthy at the end of the day.
